DENMARK

Denmark has a broadly Mediterranean climate with wet, cool winters and warm, dry summers. The maritime influence of the Southern Ocean moderates towards the northern reaches of the subregion. Steep hills and valleys create many unique microclimates with excellent grape growing conditions. Soils are sandy loams from granite and gneissic bedrocks.

FRANKLAND RIVER

Frankland River is inland and northerly where the cool nights and warm days provide a true continental climate. Although inland, a moderating sea breeze often finds its way into the region. The ironstone based gravels and duplex sandy loam lie over clay sub soils derived from granite and gneiss outcrops. These have weathered over time to create the undulating rolling hills that define the region.

MOUNT BARKER

Mount Barker is 50 kilometres from the Southern Ocean so its Mediterranean climate displays strong continental aspects. It is the coolest of the subregions, with high diurnal ranges and cool nights ideal for retaining acidity and structure in high quality wines produced for longer term cellaring. Mount Barker soils are marl with lateritic gravelly and sandy loams derived from ancient granite protrusions.

PORONGURUP

Porongurup boasts a special climate feature - a nocturnal thermal zone created by warm air rising above the denser cold air sliding down the hillside of the range and settling on the valley floor. This 'air drainage' produces ideal conditions for ripening. The Porongurup's spectacular geomorphic granite range creates a range of soil types with karri loams the most productive.

THE GREAT SOUTHERN

DRAMATIC contrasts. A vast and rich cultural history. Rugged coastline and striking tall timber forests. Sophistication and rusticity. The Great Southern is, at its core, a place of natural distinctions and divergencies, danger and beauty, diversity and uniqueness.

Producing wines of excellence comes naturally in the Great Southern, so pick a skipper and plan your adventure around the region's cellar doors. Taste the local hero varieties of Riesling and Shiraz but don't miss the outstanding Cabernet Sauvignon, Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc.

Greatness is in our wine.
